

Part I. Our nation has encountered notable events following the year 2020. As a starter, we have had to undergo a detrimental pandemic that has alternated the lives of many. In addition, many Americans have protested all over the world to shed light on political injustice. Not to mention, the devastating natural disasters that have been destructive to our entire ecosystem. As for me, unfortunately, this global pandemic has undoubtedly caused problematic issues, one including, unemployment. As a young adult, specific obligations that require financial assistance will evidently cause a great deal of stress. Despite that, this pandemic has given me an opportunity to search for internships that coincides with my major and be increasingly motivated. Also, this ongoing situation has granted me more time to focus on myself and search for my true meaning of life. Amongst all this inevitable change, political altercations, violence, and extreme grief by next year we as a nation will be resilient and prevail over our hardships. Just a glimpse of optimism has pushed me to remain content and anticipate a brighter future. With a proactive use of my time, I have protested, volunteered, and donated for causes that work for the betterment of our society as a whole. Through these difficult times, my defining moment is recognizing change and doing my best adjusting to it. Moving forward is the hardest part during these troubling times. I encourage many of my friends to remain optimistic because after all, this is all temporary. Greater things will come eventually besides 2021 awaits.

BLACK LIVES MATTER