

2020

This year started off so good for me. I was ready for a new semester and to do really well in school. I picked all the good professors for each of my courses and overall was really happy with my course schedule. I started to go to the gym and made that into a routine. I was even job hunting so I can earn some extra money to pay for tuition, books, rent and all my other expenses. I finally got a job and I was so excited to start working when the pandemic hit us all. The short one week of spring break turned into two weeks and then school completely shut down. I had no choice but to move out of my dorm and I barely got to say goodbye to my college friends before I moved back home. I was not ready for this sudden change when I was just getting adjusted to the college lifestyle and being on my own. The job I got was an on-campus job which unfortunately ended because of the school shutdown. Their office decided to close due to the shutdown. So here I was jobless again and living with my parents. The sudden switch to all virtual classes was so difficult at first cause so many teachers were not prepared to have their classes fully online. It was unorganized and confusing. It was also really hard to concentrate at home with everyone being quarantined together. The constant fear of getting the virus is still over my head. I'm still worried about my mom because she works in the healthcare field and is in contact with COVID-19 patients sometimes. It is hard to go on about your day and live your life with the pandemic still around. So many deaths have occurred this year not just because of COVID-19 but other reasons as well which just makes this year so much more worse. I just want to get through this year with good grades and hopefully without catching the virus. Thankfully, I was able to get a new job that pays better than the one I lost and have now moved into my new apartment so I can definitely see some improvement in this year for me. I was just going crazy in quarantine. I hated staying at home all day, having to find new things to entertain yourself with and not being able to see your friends. At least now I have something to focus on.
